Foreword

We would like to start our newsletter with the announcement of the YEi Competition which can get you a chance to win a business trip to France to meet potential partners and learn about the French entrepreneurship ecosystem. A second program, called NETVA, will help the French entrepreneurs to understand the U.S.’s high-technology market through training, mentoring and networking.

In July, the Office for Science and Technology in Chicago will organize jointly with the University of Madison a workshop for American and French (from INRA Agrocampus Ouest, Rennes) scientists on dairy products. The goal of this workshop will be to exchange and share knowledge in this field and promote collaborations.

We would also like to congratulate Patrick Couvreur, Nano-oncologist at the CNRS, and his team have won the European Inventor Award 2013 with their discovery on "Nano-medicines: tiny capsules, enormously effective against cancer".

Enjoy your read!
