The third workshop Berkeley-Inria-Stanford (BIS’2013) will take place on Stanford’s campus from May 20 to May 22. It is co-organized by Inria (French National Institute for Research in Computer Science & Control), Stanford University, and UC Berkeley in partnership with CITRIS and the French Ministry of Foreign Affairs. BIS’2013 is part of the joint research program Inria@SiliconValley. The objectives of this workshop are to present the current state of scientific collaborations and to work on proposals for future ambitious joint projects. This year BIS’2013 will welcome presentations about the Smart Cities project, launched with CITRIS in 2013 in the framework of the new partnership between the cities of Paris and San Francisco.

More information on the workshop is available at https://project.inria.fr/inria-siliconvalley/workshops/bis2013/.